What to Do When a Fire Becomes Uncontrollable

1. Fire Extinguisher
   - This should be at the top of your list of must-haves, doesn't need to be a full-iron variety, a small one will do.
   - When you get one, find out how to properly use it, and be sure to teach everyone in the family how to use it.
   - Keep the extinguisher in the kitchen, since that is the place in the house that most susceptible to fire.

2. Smoke Detector
   - As small as a smoke detector can be, it can do a lot in preventing a fire from spreading.
   - In the event that a fire breaks out in an empty room, the detector will sense the smoke and alert you, giving you time to evacuate the house. It would be best to get one for every room in the house. Remember to replace the batteries regularly to ensure that they're always working on time.

3. Fire Blanket
   - A fire blanket is a sheet of flame-retardant material used to smother burning flames. Fire blankets used for the home are normally small and made of Fibreglass or Kevlar. If the fire is small enough, you can use this to put it out instead of operating the fire extinguisher.

4. Long Garden Hose
   - If you live in a multi-story house and you need to evacuate the house because the fire has become uncontrollable, you want to make sure you have a way to get to the upstairs windows. Someone can hop out some of the rooms.
   - Conversely, the ladder can also be used to escape out the window from an upper floor to the ground floor.

5. Portable Ladder
   - If you live in a two-story house and you need to evacuate the house because the fire has become uncontrollable, you want to make sure you have a way to get to the upstairs windows. Someone can hop out some of the rooms.
   - Conversely, the ladder can also be used to escape out the window from an upper floor to the ground floor.

   Having the right tools for fire safety will give you peace of mind knowing that if the worst happens, you'll be prepared. However, it's a fire spread faster than you can control. It's important to locate everything beforehand and get everyone out of the house. Nothing is valuable enough for you to risk the safety of you and your family.
